It will be remembered that early in the campaign Senator Quay said "If General Harrison keeps on making six [illegible] speeches, as he has done, he will elect himself without any assistance from the national, state or local committees." General Harrison has kept on as he began and it is of the active assistance of all three committees. His success is due largely to the fact that he is a perfectly honest, unaffected, sincere man. The Chicago Inter Ocean, speaking of these speeches, says: "If General Harrison was in any sense a sham and worked up speech to hide his thought or to deceive the people, one day's experience would end him. But [illegible] ing, and the mighty throngs marvel to see him in such style, in such multitudes, and with such informality and enthusiasm that the country is amazed, not more at the readiness of the man than at the abounding testimony that the people give him of their regard and admiration and confidence. He is genuine all through, and utters no false notes or uncertain sounds."

The Boston Journal expresses the same idea in the following: "General Harrison's speeches are not accidents or artificial. They are the expressions of his intelligence and convictions, his information and his principles. He is a gentleman talking to his friends without [illegible] and [illegible] was thought of preparing phrases for [illegible] meetings."

Mr Blaine is perhaps an older man in some directions than General Harrison. But our readers know how open his speeches have been to criticism. No prominent speaker has yet taken part in the campaign without saying some unwise or foolish things to give a handle to the opposition. The press cannot do better than to emphasize this speech-making of General Harrison.

Several papers have been reporting an outrageous lie regarding some remarks made by Harrison, at a meeting held in Durly hall, Bloomington, Illinois, in 1876. A man by the name of Cordell makes affidavit that Gen. Harrison used these words: "If it were not for them (the Irish) we would not need half our police and jails, which are filled full of them. They are only good to shovel dirt and grade railroads for which they receive [illegible] than they are worth, as they are not an acquisition to the American people. No intelligent man believes that General Harrison used that language. First because he was better Fourth and second, because no man [illegible] his senses would use such language. But now that the Democratic Journal of Commerce, the Democratic Journal of Rochester, The Rochester Post Express, October 1st, publishes a series of affidavits which should cover for all time the matter, though it was unnecessary in order to convince any [illegible] voter. The Hon. John M. Hay, [illegible] governor of the state of Oregon was present, and remembers all the circumstances and declares that such language was never used. Edward O'Connell, a prominent Irish American and assistant state attorney for McLean county, was present and declares that he is an Irish American and that he has taken an interest in Irish affairs and would be quick to resent any insult to the Irish people, and therefore knows such language was not used. Some twenty or thirty others, of similar character including Sheriffs, chiefs of police, judges, lawyers, many ex-soldiers and [illegible] of the county, were present. Every one of these men [illegible] Lake Assembly [illegible] utterly false.

Our readers will [illegible] to the fact that we have [illegible] President Cleveland [illegible] the early part of his administration [illegible] civil service reform. But [illegible] year Congress [illegible] that he was [illegible] of Democratic party [illegible] illustrations of this in the Gazette, by which it is [illegible]

General Beaver made a statement of the way in which he happened to send this order to the Western press, out of the Indianapolis Journal as follows: "A few days before the date of this circular I was called to the office of the [illegible] Mr. Fairbanks stated to me that he had received many urgent requests from very prominent democrats to have republicans employed in the arsenals throughout the country dismissed and democrats appointed in their places. The secretary said he did not want to turn the service into a political machine, but that something would have to be done to bring about a [illegible] per cent of officers in the ordnance department. He said that he would like to have democrats appointed wherever republicans were discovered, and that the offices [illegible] occupied by women and children should be recognized in the same political degree as those filled by men. I replied to Mr. Endicott that I would [illegible] matter and immediately [illegible] a circular and send it to Secretary Endicott's [illegible] section. The [illegible] approved of it and I had [illegible] made and sent to all of the commanders of the arsenals. In three or four instances the commanding officers wrote official or private letters to me, [illegible] that they had made careful canvasses of their employes and they found that the majority of them were democrats, and it was the object of my circular was to consider between the two parties the positions there could be an equal amount [illegible] of the democratic party. No comment is needed except this. No democrat can return the compliment of his party and be a loyal [illegible] enforcement. We do not question the sincerity of Cleveland or other professions. But his party has been [illegible] strife for [illegible] a good fight for four years [illegible] finally succeeded. Only during the frank utterances of Harrison and the silence of Cleveland on civil service reform, these together with the above letter there is no [illegible] reason for the [illegible] voting for Cleveland.
